Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found hers if benefited from first dose. She continued its use, and after taking ten bottles, found herself sound and well, now does her own housework and is as well as she ever was. Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at DR. R. H. HOLLIDAY'S Drugstore; large bottles 50 cents and one dollar.

THE EDITOR'S CHAIR.

HOW THINGS LOOK FROM OUR STAND POINT.

The Opinion of The Editor and the Opinion of Others which we Can Endorse on the Various Topics of the Day.

A reporter of the New York Star, in conversation with Secretary Rusk, reports him as saying that he saw no reason why Mr. Harrison should not be renominated in 1892. When this tariff bill is passed and the silver bill is out of the way, says the Secretary, I think that the people will unite in saying that Mr. Harrison's administration has been highly successful and ready as I think they are now to renominate him. This is the the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and we hope of the entire Republican party also, but the Southern brethren and negro can't see it that way. They may not be responsible for their opinions, for distance sometimes fails to lend enchantment to the view.

Oates, of Alabama, and Carlisle, of Kentucky, are both out in long articles on the Sub-Treasury plan. Each admit that the farmer is greatly depressed, and oppressed by unjust laws, yet they say that the sub-Treasury plan will not do. They claim to be statesmen and as such it would have been more becoming in them to have used the same time and energy they have expended in criticizing the bill, in amending it or framing a better one with the same objects. If they as statesmen in the halls of Congress had done their duty protecting the farmers' interests, or rather in seeing that they got simple justice, then the sub-Treasury bill would never have been necessary. What are they going to do about it? Are they going to sit idle and not only do nothing for the farmer's relief, but even criticize the measures we are forced to offer for ourselves?

We see in a recent issue of the Raleigh Chronicle that several of the trustees of the University are advocating higher and better educational advantages for the women of the State, and to that end proposed the opening of the doors of the University to both sexes. That Texas, Mississippi, and perhaps other Southern States admit women to their Universities is very true, and even at the University of North Carolina one lady received her diploma, taking the regular four years course and winning high honors in her classes The plan, we think, is hardly a good one. The course of study is wide and very thorough, but we think would need modifying and readjusting to be suitably adopted for women. For women, to be educated, requires a course of study different from men. We mean by that that women educated with men, taking the same course of study, would not meet the requirements of her sex and hence not be educated. Taking into consideration the necessary changes that would have to be made in the present curriculum to be suitably adapted for women and also the great disadvantages derived from the necessary association of the sexes thrown so closely in contact, would justify us and all liberal friends to higher education of women to advocate instead a separate institution or university for them. The State Constitution makes provisions for the establishment and maintainance of one or more Universities and makes no discrimination in regard to sex. We think it the duty of the State to take hold of such measures and provisions and make use of them; more especially since the interests of those are at stake who have no power of legislation within themselves and too modest to advocate their rights.

UNIVERSITY COMMENCEMENT.

(Special Correspondent.)

To recuperate from the work and confinement of the schoolroom we decided last week to take a few days recreation at Chapel Hill. The exercises had fairly begun before we arrived, but arrived just in time to meet the Alumni and boys in the highest pitch of enthusiasm over the loyalty of the Alumni and students demonstrated by the liberal donations to the University for the establishment of a much needed Chair of History.

The attendance of this year, owing to the Richmond display of the week before, and the general depression in crops so prevalent throughout the Eastern part of the State, was in number somewhat below the expectation, general interest, however, did not fag in the least, the enthusiasm, general harmony and loyalty more than met the expectations of the University and counterbalance for any deficiency in number.

Wednesday was Alumni Day, of these the most distinguished and influential were on hand to lend their influence to the occasion.

Col. Steele, the president of the Association, announced that the first order of the day was the presentation of a tablet by the trustees in memory of the late Dr. Charles Phillips and an address for the occasion by Mr. R. H. Battle, of Raleigh. Mr. Battle's address was a sketch of Dr. Phillips' life, beautifully portraying his high scholarly attainments as a professor of the University and his character as a great and illustrious man.

Mr. Battle's address was followed by Mr. Wm. J. Peele in behalf of the former pupils of Prof. R. H. Graves, presented a memorial tablet in his honor, and in the tender memory in which he is so much esteemed by all who knew him. Mr. Peele's address was a good insight into his life as a man and perfect portrait of his professorship in the institution. Repeated applause greeted his address, which often rose to genuine oratory.

Col. Steele then presented Col. W. H. S. Burgwyn, who was chosen to deliver the address on the establishing of a Chair of History. His address was principally a resume of the cardinal points in North Carolina History. It was in main a great historical review, showing much historical research. The effort was not without effect and was worthy of the man and the occasion.

The exercises of the day was then concluded. The Alumni then repaired to the Gerrard Hall where the tables had been prepared for the grand banquet. When the clash of the bayonet and dagger had ceased to be heard the establishment of the Chair of History came up—enthusiasm soon became general, ardent and eloquent addresses with liberal donations followed each other in rapid succession until $30,000 was pledged, enthusiasm reached its highest possible pitch. Such true love and genuine patriotism so freely demonstrated was indeed inspiring, the indifferent and most reticent became enthused until every latent feeling of love and loyalty was revived anew and showed itself in the glorification.

Thursday, Commencement Day, the crowd was much larger, the great Memorial Hall was crowded to overflow. The young graduates, twenty one in number, arrayed themselves upon the rostrum, distinguished members of the Alumni and trustees afforded a beautiful background. All the graduates were from this State and gained honor for them which will foreshadow strength and brilliancy in North Carolina history.

The Wiley P. Mangum medal, given for the best oration from the graduating class, was won by Henry Johnston, of Tarboro. The contest was very close. Mr. V. S. Bryant, formerly a teacher of Salem High School, was second in the contest. The Societies representative contest, which came off on the night preceding was exceptionally good. Robert W. Bingham, of Mebaneville, received the medal. The remainder of the day, Thursday, was spent in awarding prizes, medals, certificates, diplomas, &c., followed by the closing doxology and benediction.

The annual commencement reception at Smith Hall at night was largely attended and greatly enjoyed. The annual commencement ball followed the reception. It was the most brilliant on record. The decorations were sublime. Music for the commencement exercises was made by Kesnich Richmond Band, which greatly adds to the enjoyment of the occasion. We forgot to mention in the former part of this article in speaking of the action of the trustees to state that they filled the vacancy made by the death of Dr. Mangum by placing Horace H. Williams, by a unanimous vote, in the chair of Moral Science. Mr. Williams is a young man and native North Carolinian, the selection seems to be a good one, and so far has given entire satisfaction.

At the opening of the next year of the University two new departments will have been added to the institution and we anticipate for it a revival of public sentiment and more healthy support, which true State pride so justly demands. G. E. B.

WAYNE COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Sub-Treasury Bill and Other Alliance Demands Incorporated in the Platform.

The first gun of the campaign of 1890 was fired in Wayne county on last Saturday. The influence of the farmer through the Alliance and the Alliance through the Democratic party was closely indicated in the platform adopted by the convention of that county. The following, as given by the Argus, are some of the planks of the platform that was unanimously adopted:

2. That we deplore the continuance in power of the sectional Republican party, with its train of evil consequences which have ever marked its sway, with its partisan legislation, its ruinous financial policy and its unjust and iniquitous tariff laws, and pledge our united efforts to drive it from power.

3. That we favor equal and exact justice to all men, and we deplore the fact that the Republican party has been, during its entire course, under the control and influence of the moneyed classes of the North and always responsive to their demands, and against the interests of the great body of the people—maintaining its influence by the most barefaced fraud and bribery.

4, That we favor the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

5, That we favor the removing of the federal tax on State bonds.

6; That we favor a change in the principle and amount of taxation; a change that will lower taxes not only to a revenue basis, but even lower, and make up any dificiency in revenue by a graduated income tax; in other words we demand a system of taxation that will not bear more heavily upon the poor than the rich, but which will be just to all our citizens.

7, That we favor the abolition of the National banking system and the substitution of a better system that will take the control of the money of the country out of the hands of the few; a system that will give us an elastic and flexible currency, one that will contract and expand exactly with the annual products of the country, thereby furnishing a just and fixed measure of their value, and that the sub-Treasury bill lately introduced in both Houses of Congress comes more nearly effecting this than any other measure yet offered, and that we approve of and endorse said bill.

They were unanimously adopted amid much enthusiasm. On call of the convention, Mr. C. B. Aycock came forward to speak to the resolutions. He never appeared to better advantage. He made one of those logical, forceful and ringing speeches, which a great many people of this section seem to think he only can make. The people of Wayne have always been proud of Mr. Aycock, but we believe they were, at the conclusion of his speech, prouder than ever of him.

After his speech the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"The Democratic County Convention of Wayne county, proud of the abilities and character of Charles B. Aycock, Esq., of Wayne county, and recognizing him as eminently qualified to represent this district in Congress, do hereby endorse and recommend him for nomination for Congress from the 3rd District."

Not only potatoes and other farm products that we can raise do we buy from the Northern farmers, even our grass and garden seeds which can be as successfully raised in North Carolina as anywhere. We need a seed farm in our State to supply our home farmers with their seeds. Here is an enterprise that would prove remunerative if properly conducted with sufficent capital. The day will come when such farms will be established in the Southern States. Why not now?

Sending abroad for articles that can be raised on your farm, is but a repetition of the crime of robbing your soil every year without returning anything to it.

The Sub-Treasury Bill.

THE McCLAMMY BILL NO SUBSTITUTE FOR IT.

Dr. Macune Says the Farmers are Determined to Have Their Bill or One Like It—Col. Polk Interviewed.

[Atlanta Constitution.]

Washington, May 30. (Special) C. W. Macune, chairman of the Farmers' Alliance legislative committe, upon being asked this evening about the status of the sub-treasury bill and if the Alliance would adopt the McClammy bill as a substitute, wrote out the following in reply:

C. W. Macune, chairman legislative committee of the National Farmers' Alliance, says:

"The sub-treasury bill is really more popular every day. It is being discussed and approved by the great conservative element of the country; not farmers alone, but lawyers, doctors, merchants, and even bankers are often in favor of it. It is the only measure that has ever been offered that encourages the growth of the country, town and rural city, and will stimulate home enterprise and induce manufacturing in the country. Hence the real support of the measure is increasing every day, and it makes no difference what the present congress may do with the bills before it, the principle seeking recognition in the sub-treasury bill is based on ultimate truth, meets the approbation of nearly all who take the trouble to understand it, and must in time prevail. The principle contended for in this measure can never change, and its advocates will never yield to any substitute for it. The details are immaterial, but those who admit the principle and object on account of detail—as some of the members of congress do—place themselves in an awkward position, because we have challenged those who object to this detail for carrying out the principles, to offer a better system, and it would get our support."

THE PARTY BOSSES AT WORK.

"The facts are they love Wall street better than they do the farmers, for the simple reason that Wall street donates the boodle money for controlling the elections where votes are purchasable and the party bosses neither fear nor respect the farmers because they have always of late years been able to keep them about equally divided by sectional prejudice. It remains, however, to be seen how long that will continue. Should the present Congress see fit to respond to the pressure being brought to bear on them by the corrupt party bosses, whose dictum is to ostracise every member of the party who will not join in to give a unanimous vote against the bill from both parties, which now seems probable, it will not hurt the true interests of the measure any, because people know the measure has some friends there, as many members have so said and endorsed the principle. We will, under such circumstances, know that the bosses whipped them into line to protect others who were compelled to vote against it.

"Should this happen another bill, involving the same principle, will follow as soon as possible. The principle that seeks to stop the present discrimination against the farmer must be recognized or present tendencies will carry us on to destruction."

IT IS NO SUBSTITUTE.

"Mr. McClammy's bill is in no sense of the word an Alliance measure, and is not nor will it ever be a substitute for the sub-treasury bill. He had no right or authority to say that it was endorsed by every Alliance in the land. It fills an entirely different field, and if it should become a law, there would still be just as great a necessity for the sub-treasury bill as now. It seeks simply to increase the volume of money on land. The Alliance has not discussed or acted upon that question. We have announced in a general way, in favor of an increase in the volume of money, and have discussed and adopted the sub treasury plan. The reason for this is that the farmer is behind in the race to day. There is an actual discrimination against him by a fixed volume money, the control of which the government entrusts to a class. Their bill seeks to remove this discrimination and place them on an equal footing with the rest of the procession. They say give us this and we will make this country blossom like a rose and will join you all in any safe and conservative method for increasing the stable volume of the circulating medium. What we want now is a flexibility that will enable us to assert our freedom from the 'power of money to oppress.'"

WHAT COL. POLK SAYS.

Colonel L. L. Polk, president of the Farmers' Alliance, said to night that he was not the author of the McClammy bill, introduced yesterday, which provides for the government to lend money on lands at one per cent. It was he says, drawn up by his private secretary, D H. Rittenhouse, and he knew nothing about it.

"Indeed," said he to night, "I have not considered the bill critically, and am not willing to express an opinion upon it yet."

"Then you have not abandoned the sub-treasury?"

"No; we shall not abandon it until it has been squarely defeated, or until some better measure has been proposed. We considered land measures before the sub-treasury bill was prepared, and decided that such measures would not give to the currency sufficient flexibility. However, I have not made a careful enough examination of the McClammy bill to give you an opinion. If, however, after examination, we find this bill better than the sub-treasury, I should be perfectly willing to abandon the latter."

"Do you know the ways and means committee have decided against the sub-treasury bill?"

"Yes, I have heard it, but if this Congress adjourns without doing anything to relieve the farmer, you will hear a howl which will tell on the men who failed to aid them by legislation."

A SAMPSON BOY

In the Mountains of Western North Carolina.

The Commencement at Rutherford College, May 20th and 21st, was thought the grandest occasion in the history of the institution (46 years). This being a re-union of the old students it called together (of the ten thousand students sent out from here) many distinguished men who are scattered all over the entire Union. The President of this institution must indeed feel gratified, knowing that he has done so much good for the cause of education in this institution. The past term closed with an enrollment one hundred and thirteen. One of the prettiest and most striking features of the occasion was a display of the students marching in a solid phalanx over the college grounds, saluting the President o the institution with kind words of approval. The annual address was delivered by Gen. R B. Vance of Washinglon City. The crowd was unusually large, more than three thousand were present to applaud the occasion

Commencement over four of us secured a team and driver, with all the necessary equipments for camp life, and started on a trip to the mountains, to be gone two weeks.

[To be continued next week.]

THE WEATHER AND THE FARMER.

It cannot be denied that the state of the weather is a most important factor in farming. The success or failure of a crop is nearly always attributed to the favorable or unfavorable effect of the weather. Yet, until recently, it was hardly thought that the study of the subject would yield much of practical utility. That there has been a rapid development of the science of the weather during the past few years and growing recognition of its importance to the farmer is evident from the fact that 32 States now have organized weather services. The N. C. State Weather Service was established as a division of the Experiment Station in 1886.

The important work of this division is the collection of meteorological data from which the climatic conditions of every section of the State may be determined.

The weather service is practically useful to the farmer mainly through the distribution of weather forecasts, cold wave and frost warnings. A valuable feature is the weather crop bulletin, which gives weekly a brief statement of the effect of the weather on staple crops and entirely prevents outside misrepresentations of the condition of the farmer's crops and enables him to estimate their probable value. It will be sent to all who derire it.—C. F. von Herrmann, Meteorologist.

The Hustling West.

SOME NOTES OF MY TRIP TO ST. LOUIS.

The General Conference, &c., &c.

[BY D. B. NICHOLSON.]

On the 5th ult., I joined at Salisbury, N. C., a party of delegates and visitors to the General Conference of the M. E. Church South, to convene at St. Louis, Mo., on the 7th. There were some twenty of us, preachers, lawyers, ladies and children. We had every prospect of a pleasant trip, which was to be fully realized. We left Salisbury at 11:25 a. m., on time sharp, with Capt. Arther Frazier, a College mate of the writer's as conductor. Our journey that afternoon lay through "the land of the sky." The weather was charming and we were all in a happy frame of wind to enjoy to the full, the grandest and sublimest scenery which this continent affords. The mountains of Western North Carolina; Who can discribe them? I shall not attempt it. They must be seen to be appreciated. On this occasion they were at their prettiest. The foliage of the oaks, chestnut, laurels, spruces, pines and balsoms was just at that stage of growth to present in harmonious contrast every conceivable shade of verdure. The dog-wood, the mountain honey-suckle and a thousand wind flowers were in bloom, and "all nature looked gay" indeed. By the kindness of the conductor I went up and down the ridge in baggage car, from the open door of which the finest views could be had. The engineering of the Western North Carolina Railroad from Old Forb to Blacks Mountain is certainly a wonderful achievement. One cannot get an adequate conception of the crookedness of the track as it winds around ravines, and through cuts and tunnels, at times almost over lapping itself. In gaining a distance of three miles just before reaching the top of the ridge the cars travel a distance of nine miles, and may be seen by an observer standing at the same point perhaps half a dozen times.

Beyond Asheville the railroad runs through the far famed French Broad Valley, skirting the river first on one side and then on the other for a distance of some seventy miles. Here the scenery, if not so grand, is more beautiful than in the Blue Ridge. The valley is narrow and is bounded on either side by mountain bluffs whose beauty challenges the artest's skill and the poet's imagination. Twenty miles beyond Asheville in this valley lies the little town of Marhall. It is hemmed in on one side by the mountains and on the other by the river. The level land upon which it stands cannot not be more than 100 yards wide. The inimitable Bill Nye saw it once and described it as "the ribon town—all long and no wide." That description is so exact that it would be folly to try to improve upon it.

We reached Knoxville, Tenn., about 8 p.m., and passed through the Cumberland Mountains, which Miss Murphrey has so lately made famous as the scenes of her charming stories, in the night. This was a matter of regret, but we felt somewhat compensated for the disappointment when morning dawned upon us in the midst of the Blue Grass country of Kentucky. Here we saw "the cattle upon a thousand hills" vast herds of fine sheep, and horses and mules almost innumerable. This is the best country on our entire route, I think. Reaching Cincinnati about 8 a. m., on the 6th, we changed cars and started at once to St. Louis over the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad. That part of Ohio through which we passed is almost one continuous town devoted to manufacturing of one kind and another, so that we had no opportunity of judging of Ohio as an agricultural State. One experience at Cincinnati, however, I was about to forget. It was the conspicuous absence of the negro. The very first distinct impression I received after arriving there was that we had left the negro behind us, and the first thought to arise in my mind was, "how can these people who do not have the negro contend with, teach us how to solve the race problem." But that is the way with the world. Everybody knows better how to manage other peoples' affairs than their own. White men were driving teams, shoveling cool and doing all manner of hard work. This was only a foretaste of what I was to see in that line.

Southern Indiana was a great disappointment to me. It is a very hilly and a very poor country. Farming in many sections of North Carolina is far ahead of farming in Southern Indiana. We dined at the city of Vincennes in Indiana just across the river from Illinois. The table was waited on by young and pretty white girls. This ought to have made a hungry man happy; but the dinner was not to my liking. It may have been good, but it was evidently seasoned with everything mentioned recently in the Woman's department of THE CAUCASIAN, and many other things besides. No doubt my taste was too unsophisticated to appreciate so radical a change all at once. It requires a gradual process of education to bring one up to so high a standard even in culenary matters.

Passing into Illinois one notices quickly the change in the topography and soil. The country is far the most part level, while the soil is black and apparently very fertile. The chief evidence of the latter are the perfect jungles of corn stalks where corn grew last year, for the wheat and oat crops are poor here as well as every where else. Here we saw the farmers breaking their land flush preparatory to planting corn. The plowing was done with from two to four hourses all hitched abreast. Very few mules are used. I did not see but one single horse hitched to a plow autside of North Carolina, and that was in a truck garden in the suburbs of St. Louis.

On my return I was susprised to see how little progress the farmers had made. It had been so wet they could not plant. The entire country from East Tennessee to the Mississippi river is a paradise for cows and sheep. Grass and clover grow even in the woods. I saw some milch cows by the ride of which the best in this section would appear insignificant, and I do not care to risk my character for truth by telling how large the oxen were which I saw hauling mill logs in Indiana. It was everywhere noticeable that the towns, the large ones especially, are thriving at the expense of the rural districts. How long this condition will last before serious damage to the entire people will result remains to be seen. There must be something radically wrong in the economics of a civilization that produces such a state of things. Agriculture must be restored to its normal status in our economy or the people will eventially suffer for bread. What shall I say of the city of St. Louis? Well, it has 500,000 inhabitants, fronts the Mississippi river a distance of 15 miles and is 6 miles wide at the widest point. It is busy, bustling, hustling city. The people are all on the move and in a hurry. horses, loaded or unloaded, kept in a trot. There are nearly 200 miles of street car track, and one can see I think as many as 50 street cars moving at once from any corner on Washington Avenue below 10th street. Some of the cars are drawn by horses, some by cobles, and a few by electricity. The cable cars are the most popular, their motion being much more uniform than that of the horse cars. How they moved was a puzzle to me till I found out how it was, and then is was as simple as could be. The street is tunnelled all the way under the track. In this tunnel a foot or so beneath the surface runs an endless cable propelled by a 500 horse power engine located in a building which you never see without looking it up. The tunel is covered by parallel iron plates between which is an opening about an inch wide. Through this opening is let down what is called a "grip," which is managed by levers resembling those of a locomotive. The "grip" is mode to seize the cable to move the car and to let it loose to stop it, and that is all there is of it. The impression one first receives on seeing these cars move with nothing either pushing or pulling them, so far as one can see, is one of wonder at the ingennity and progress of the age in which we live. The parks, the zoological garden and Shaw's Botanical garden are all places of beauty and interest. Forest Park contains 1300 acres and has 27 miles of splendid turnpike drives. Shaw's Garden and Tower Grove Park were bequeathed to the city by the late Henry Shaw, a millionaire batchelor. The garden is Mrs. Martha Stokes, widow of the late James W. Stokes, while preparing beeswax last Friday morning had the misfortune to have her dress catch on fire. All her clothes were burned off before assistance arrived, and death relieved her in a few hours of her great suffering. The orphaned children and relatives have our sympathy in their sad bereavement.

The Warsaw Dramatic Club is at work on another entertainment for the benefit of the Presbyterian Church. We will give further notice in a few days.

Heretofore we have said nothing of politics, but we now come out and speak boldly and plainly for our countyman, B. F. Grady, for Congress. He is one of the brainiest men in the State, a farmer at this time and has had experience enough to render him fit for the responsible position. No farmer can object to him, as he is an Alliance man. No lawyer can object, as he is well able to give advice along that line, and others need not care for his profession. How any of his countymen can fail to support him in the premises is to us a mystery, and we say to one and all give him your hearty support and thus honor yourselves and the 3rd District.

Sickness is on the increase in and around town, and many have succumbed. We will hail with delight a good rain.

Georgia has lost its charms for the average Duplin negro and many have come back, and others will as soon as the money can be made to defray expenses.

The negro agents have commenced to return and drum for hands, and, while we like to see law upheld, we think our citizens should take steps, and at once, to keep them away and thus protect the farms.

"Tired All the Time."

Say many poor men and women, who seem overworked, or are debilitated by change of season, climate or life. If you could read the hundreds of letters praising Hood's Sarsaparilla which come from people whom it has restored to health, you would be convinced of its merits. As this is impossible, why not try Hood's Sarsaparilla yourself and thus realize its benefit? It will tone and build up your system, give you a good appetite, overcome that tired feeling and make you feel, as one woman expresses it, "like a new creature."

An Atlanta Lady's Sad Condition.

"About two years ago a sore came on my nose. I called in a physician who could arrest it only for a few days, when it would appear as bad as ever. Finally it became permanent, and despite the constant attention of several physicians it continued to grow worse, the discharge from the ulcer being exceedingly offensive. This was my condition when I commenced to take Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) about one month ago, but I am now happy to say that after taking four large bottles of your wonderful medicine my nose is entirely well, and my general health better than it has been in ten years."

MRS. LUCINDA RUSH, Atlanta, Ga.

Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) cured me of a blood taint that had troubled me for years. I consider it without an equal.

The State Chronicle.

Everybody in North Carolina knows the character of the State Chronicle published at Raleigh. It has always been a progressive, independent newspaper since its establishment seven years ago by Mr. Walter H. Page. Afterwards, under the editorship of the lamented Capt. Randolph A Shotwell, it had no superior as a bold, fearless, honest Democratic weekly. For more than four years now it has been under the management of Mr. Josephus Daniels, who has gathered around it the best talent in the State. Its circulation has grown rapidly until it now has the largest circulation ever attained by any political paper in Raleigh. It has gained that circulation:

1. By plain truth telling.
2. By printing the news and all the news.
3. By having convictions and expressing them without fear or favor.
4. By an earnest and aggressive championship of Democratic principles.
5. By standing by the rights of the people against any powers or corporations.

Recently the paper has been improved and gives its subscribers more matter every week than ever before. In order to place it in every family in the State the subscription price has been reduced to $1.25 per year. The management of the paper expects to add 5,000 new subscribers during the present year.

The Standard.

"I regard Hood's Sarsaparilla as having passed above the grade of what are commonly called patent or proprietary medicines," said a well known physician recently. "It is fully entitled to be considered a standard medicine, and has won this position by its undoubted merit and by the many remarkable cures it has effected. For an alterative and tonic it has never been equalled."

AFFINITY.

In an old world temple two blocks of stone,
Where the sky of Athens burns holy blue,
Have been standing stately, and still, and lone,
Dreaming together the ages through.

There were two pearls hid in the self same shell
(Like sweet sea tears that for Venus weep);
They have whispered secrets that none may tell,
Side by side in the heart of the deep.

When Boabdil ruled in the land of Spain,
Two roses grew in a garden rare;
They drank of the fountain's silver rain,
And mingled their scents in the drowsy air.

In Venice, to rest on a golden dome,
Two doves came floating on pinions white;
And they loved each other, and made their home
Under the stars on a still May night.

But the changeless laws that our lives involve
Are the laws of death and cold decay;
So the temple falls, and the pearls dissolve—
The birds and the roses must pass away.

Yet each, by a strange metamorphosis,
Is born anew in some fairer form;
So the rose may live in red lips that kiss—
The marble in limbs that are white and warm.

And in hearts of lovers once more may greet
Those doves who dwelt on the dome of gold;
And in mouths of velvet the pearls may meet
To gleam more white than those pearls of old.

For how otherwise grew the wondrous birth
Of the strange and sweet affinity,
That warns two souls in this desert of earth,
They must claim each other where'er they be!

They recall, in a new found ecstasy,
The dreams of their mystic long ago;
By the marble temple, or stormy sea,
Or Moorish garden where roses blow.

And they feel the flutter of snowy wings
On the golden dome of a stately fane;
And the faithful atoms the wild wind brings
Must find each other and love again!

So, my heart that within me burns and glows,
Would read your heart, and ask you whether
You were pearl, or marble, or dove, or rose,
In that fairer world, when we were together?

—After Gautier, by Florence Henniker.

TIT FOR TAT.

"And because I am married my liberty is to be curtailed. I am never to speak to an old friend if she happens to be a woman. My wife is to tie me to her apron strings at a ball," said Mr. Drummond, sarcastically.

"I seldom wear aprons. Certainly never at a ball," said Mrs. Drummond.

"You know that is a figure of speech," said Mr. Drummond. "But now that we have spoken of the matter, Estelle, I will give you my view of the subject. If married people go out to sit in a corner with each other they might as well stay at home."

"You used to be very glad to sit in corners with me," sobbed Mrs. Drummond.

"Now," gasped Mr. Drummond despairingly, "now you are going to cry. Your eyes will be swollen, your nose red. For heaven's sake, Estelle, remember that you are at a ball."

Mrs. Drummond summoned up all her courage, swallowed her tears, drew her hand from her husband's arm, and began to fan herself furiously.

"Now you are in a temper, my dear," said her lord and master. "Go into the dressing room and powder yourself a little. Usually I object to it, but now you are flushed, and I will take you to that dear old Mrs Jackson, who has chaperoned her four granddaughters, and is quite alone in the corner. She is a most superior woman, I understand. Come, my love."

"I can do without the powder, thanks," said Mrs. Drummond; "and you may take me to Mrs. Jackson, while you, I presume, waltz with Miss Merle."

"Why, good heavens, Estelle, you would not have me break my engagement to dance with a lady, would you?" asked Mr. Drummond, in a tone of desperation.

"Oh, by no means!" said Mrs. Drummond; "fulfil your engagement."

The music began again. The handsome young couple stepped from the flower screened corner into which they had retired to have their unpleasant talk, and in a moment Mr. Drummond was whirling around the room with his arm about the pretty Miss Merle's waist, while Estelle sat on the sofa beside that superior old Mrs. Jackson, who, having aroused herself to receive Mrs. Drummond's introduction, had nodded off again, and was snoring behind her large black feather fan.

And this was Mrs. Drummond's first ball. The daughter of a clergyman, brought up, as people say, "very strictly," she had never in all her life taken a dancing lesson; she had never been in fashionable society, and retained her simple, countrified ideas of what married people owed to each other. At the parties at her mother's house Mrs. Smith and Mr. Smith, Mrs. Brown and Mr. Brown were scrupulously placed side by side. So at the lawn parties or excursions.

In this way she supposed they must pass through all the festive occasions of life, arm in arm, exchanging their opinions on things and people, viewing a startling panorama, themselves the only really important personages of the scene.

The awakening was sudden and startling. Her husband had complied with popular opinion while they still remained among her kinsfolk, and indeed he had no temptation to leave her, for she was the sweetest, prettiest and most charming person whom he ever met. Besides, the glamour of the honeymoon was still upon him. In those rural scenes the girl he had called his white rosebud seemed sweeter and purer than he could express in words. For three or four months his life was a sort of idyl, and so was hers.

Not until the last red leaves of autumn were upon the trees did he transplant his blossom to the city. There, in one of those tiny but elegant flats which young couples most affect, Estelle began her new life. Her husband was a fashionable man, free from what he spoke of as "the prejudices of the past."

For the first time in her life Estelle went to the opera, to the theatre. She was dressed by a French modiste, to whose dictum she bowed. She was called upon and pronounced "awfully sweet." She went to afternoon teas and to receptions; she had breakfasts given her by her husband's friends and connections—little parties where dancing was in order. She enjoyed it all, for at first the position of recent bride and bridegroom caused Mr. and Mrs. Drummond to be paired off together very much as they had been in the village society.

However, as time passed on newer brides appeared on the scene. Estelle was merely Mrs. Drummond. People took no special pains to bring her forward. It remained for her to do the best she could for herself. And now Arthur slipped away occasionally. She saw him talking to this one or to that one, and at first her beauty and sweetness attracted the men about her.

It was not long, however, before they discovered that she could talk of nothing but her Arthur's perfection, and the wisdom of the ancient clergyman, her father. She was shy of expressing her opinion on other topics, and she had never learned to flirt. Her idea of matronly dignity gave her manner some stiffness, and at the little dances they discovered that she not only could not dance, but that she felt that it would be wrong to do so.

"It would shock papa if he should hear of it," she would answer when some more than usually gallant youth besought her to "try," and declared that he would teach her the waltz in a few moments, and by degrees she became a fixture—

ized by elderly matrons and occasional grandfathers, while Arthur devoted himself to the ladies generally, and only appeared at her elbow at the end of the evening.

Then he would wrap her in her pretty cloaks, smile on her benignly, tell her how lovely she looked, and convey her home with all due devotion. It pleased him that his white rosebud should set herself apart for him, should choose "to blush unseen" when he did not look upon her. At first Estelle was content, less, however, as time passed on, and her blissful little air castles melted one by one, and at the ball the first protest came.

Arthur was a good dancer. He had refrained from waltzing simply because he hated to dance on the carpet in a crowded drawing room. But here in this elegant ball room, where all the youth and beauty of the city were assembled, his old delight in dancing returned. He had secured a partner for every dance of the evening. He was proud to point out that exquisitely lovely woman in the graceful and modest costume as his wife; he thought how unpleasant it would be to be the husband of the married flirt, Mrs. A——, and that the fellow who married Miss Merle would be very wretched. But, as you see, he devoted his evenings to them and others like them, looked into their eyes, clasped their waists a little closer than need be, was loverlike and sentimental with one, whispered merry words that might mean more than lay on the surface to another, and relegated his wife to the company of that superior but somnolent old lady, Mrs. Jackson.

"Shall I have a scene?" he asked himself as he went in search of Estelle, after his last dance with a debutante, who could not be prevailed upon by her chaperon to go home "until it was all over," but, to his surprise, his wife was merely a little chilly. He did not like the chilliness, but was too wise to reproach her with it. At breakfast she was a little distrait, but by no means cross. Arthur was delighted. After all, he was to be let off very easily, and when in bidding him adieu his wife handed him a letter which she desired him to post he was quite gallant in promising to execute the little duty. He glanced at the envelope as he walked along. The name upon it was quite new to him—"Mr. Louis Romaine, —— Hotel."

He had never heard his wife mention any Romaines, but the thought was only a passing one.

For a day or two business kept him out a great deal, but he found Estelle in good spirits on his return.

One day he opened the door to hear the hum of voices, the chink of spoons, and to find his wife presiding over quite an elegant little afternoon tea. Three or four very fashionable matrons and one heavy old gentleman occupied the foreground, but behind Estelle's chair stood a veritable modern Adonis—one of those men who somehow seem better dressed than other men in the same clothes.

An impromptu affair, certainly, Arthur thought, for Estelle had always impressed upon him the fact that "what made the assembly shine was Robin Adair;" in other words, that she did not care to have company if he were not present. Still, his wife's elaborate dress, the hot house flowers that adorned the room, spoke of preparation.

He said something about "an unexpected pleasure," shook hands with those he knew, and waited.

The exquisite who sat so close to Estelle had arisen, and looked politely from one to the other.

For a space Estelle did not seem to heed this, then she said, as if remembering a very unimportant duty:

"Oh, my husband, Mr. Romaine; I forgot you had not met. What a quantity of cold air you do bring into the room, Arthur."

"Sorry," said Arthur, barely nodding in return to Romaine's elegant bow, and shortly took himself out of the room.

The flat did not give him much space to pace about in, it is true, but he took advantage of what little there was, and walking into the passage that led to the kitchen he heard the waitress say to the cook:

"Oh, ain't that Mr. Romaine just lovely! I never see nobody so stylish before."

On this Arthur wandered back to his bedroom and looked into the mirror. The reflection he saw there seemed to him to be that of a rather commonplace young man. Certainly he had not the six feet of height, the broad shoulders and the splendid chin of that man behind his wife's chair. Romaine! Who on earth was he? Where had he heard that name before? Ah! he remembered. It was upon the envelope directed to the —— hotel, which he had posted. Who was he? What was he? Why had his wife never spoken of him before? What hypocrites women were! He could have sworn that he knew the name of every mortal his wife had ever met. She had had a boy lover, but his name was Johnny Craft, and he was rolly poly and yellow haired. A rolly poly, yellow haired boy could never have become this startlingly large and showy exquisite. As he thought of this point, Arthur felt a curious tingling of the blood that he had never before experienced.

He seized his hat, dragged on his overcoat, stalked to the elevator, and, being lowered to the hall by the manager thereof, who stared curiously into his wrathful face the while, took his way to a restaurant, where he dined.

After this he spent his evening at the club, and returned to find his wife not sitting up for him, as was her wont, but quietly asleep in bed.

She opened her eyes, however, as he turned up the gas.

"Oh, dear, you have waked me out of the loveliest dream!" she said. "Do put the shade on that dreadful gas."

"I hope you had a pleasant tea party," the husband said, sarcastically.

"Oh, yes," Estelle replied, smiling. "The nicest little time."

"And who is this Romaine fellow?" Arthur asked.

"An old, old friend of mine, and just too delightful for anything," his wife replied.

"He looked like a puppy to me," said Arthur.

"Don't show temper," said Mrs. Drummond, coolly. "If you didn't like him you might have talked to old Mr. Bond. I am sure he is very intelligent. And how you looked when you marched out of the room! In good society one does not display one's feelings."

Certainly his country wife was improving.

Arthur was too much startled to say anything.

The round of gayety was at its height. Cards came to the young couple by the dozen. They went as usual to one or two places nearly every night, and everywhere the handsome Louis Romaine appeared.

"Every one seems to know the fellow," Arthur said, and Estelle answered:

"Oh, yes; I have asked every one to invite him for my sake."

For her sake! This was frightful! But there was something more terrible still. His lily, his white rose, his adoring wife, who thought only of him, who cared only for his admiration, was utterly devoted to the fellow. No longer did she sit beside old ladies in a corner—she was the gayest of the gay, and ever at her side hovered Louis Romaine. Sometimes coming home from business he would meet her driving with him, and she would nod gayly. He suspected his wife of no evil. She did not flirt, she only quietly preferred the company of young Romaine to his, and now it was he who stood silently apart in the haunts of society, watching his wife with eyes full of regret and jealousy, remembering what she had been to him and was no more.

"Ball tickets!" Mrs. Drummond cried one morning. "How delightful! Of course we will go."

Her husband hesitated.

"I sha'n't be so stupid as I was at my first ball," Estelle laughed. "And you know you love dancing. I sha'n't tie you to my apron strings this time."

"We will go," he answered.

And they went.

The decollete dress that Estelle wore set off her beauty, but her husband remembered the modest lace fichu that she wore at her first ball with a pang of regret, and when the young wife turned to him with a little petulant sigh and said:

"Of course it is a bore, but we must dance the first dance together," he started violently.

"But you do not dance," said he.

"Oh! I've been taking lessons," said Estelle, "and I do dance very well."

"I am proud of you," said he. "We shall dance the first waltz together, shall we not?"

"No," said she, "not another for you to night. Besides, it is promised to Louis."

"To whom?" cried Mr. Drummond.

"I should have said Mr. Romaine," said Estelle.

And now for the first time a furious jealousy took possession of Arthur's heart. He watched his wife as she glided over the floor with Romaine, with murder in his heart; he asked no one to dance.

"How well those two look together," said some near him. "And they seem so fond of each other."

The man did not seem to mind his presence or care if he heard.

"I will bear no more," the furious husband said. "To night shall end it."

Later, after supper, he missed his wife and Romaine, and followed them to a little room where those who were weary or overheated could rest awhile. They sat there laughing, enjoying some joke.

"You will get your wraps and come home, madame," he said, in a low but furious tone. "And as for you, sir"——

"We have carried it to far," said Romaine. "Introduce me, Estelle."

"Arthur," said Estelle, "don't you remember hearing me talk of brother Lou? This is he."—Mary Kyle Dallas in Fireside Companion.

Self Possession of Women.

Women are more self possessed than men. On occasions of ceremony and display they appear happy and "at home." A well dressed woman is "in her element" at public entertainments, and she moves calmly and gracefully under the gaze of numerous eyes, while her male attendant is self conscious and flurried. Observe the placidity which characterizes a handsomely dressed woman as she takes her seat in a church or concert room, and the contrast presented by the nervousness and lack of repose in the motions of man. It has often been remarked that brides are generally collected and sedate during the marriage ceremony, while bridegrooms are bashful and awkward.—Bow Bells.

A GRAND MASONIC REVIVAL.

Over a Half a Hundred Masons in Special Communication Confer the Master's Degree, Followed by a Public Banquet.

Last Thursday was a red-letter day for the Masonic fraternity. The noon train brought to Clinton a half dozen visiting Masons from Wilmington and elsewhere, and the evening train brought nineteen more. They were met at the depot by members of the fraternity here and other citizens of the town and assigned to the hospitality of various residences. The conferring of the Master's Degree, (known as the raising of a candidate on the Third Degree of Masonry) upon our esteemed enterprising townsman, Capt. Wm. A. Johnson, of Hiram Lodge, No. 98, was the cause of this Masonic gathering. At 8:30 J. M. Marshburn, W. M. of Hiram Lodge, called the Special Communication to order. The following members of the Degree Team of the Wilmington Lodge 319 A. F. and A. M., were present to assist in conferring the Degree: Samuel Northrop, W. M., Jas. W. Monroe, S. W., P. M., H. P. West, J. W., D. M. Fennell, Treasurer, T. F. Bagley, Secretary, P. G. M., C. H. Robinson, S. D., Jas. C. Stewart, J. D., George L. Morton, R. H. Pickett, Stewards, Thos. H. Johnson, Tyler, C. H. Robinson, Marshal.

The beautiful and impressive ceremonies of this imposing degree, can never be effaced from the memory, (or even dimmed) of one who has experienced it, and when it is performed in the fine style it was on this occasion it is peculiarly impressive in the highest degree. In fact this degree, as all Masons know, is a genuine tragedy.

The music for the occasion furnished by Mr. E. P. Boatwright, organist, and Messrs. C. H. Robinson, Nathan Mayer, H. M. Bowden, R. H. Grant, U. M. Robinson and W. P. Toomer as chorus, was unusually fine. The work of the evening in the Lodge assembled being over, the sixty-five Masons from a half a dozen different lodges repaired with good appetites and real pleasure to the banquet consisting of cake, wine, strawberries and ice cream, prepared by the ladies in the hall below, where for an hour right royally did each and every one enjoy himself in social intercourse and feasting on the good things of this world.

The whole affair passed off to the highest satisfaction of every one and the visiting brethren expressed themselves as being greatly pleased at the courtesy, hearty, genuine and hospitality with which they were met by every one. May there be many similar causes for the repetition of such a happy meeting.

Commencement of Clinton Female Institute.

The closing exercises of this excellent school, under the management of Miss Mary Anderson took place on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings last.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Despite the inclement weather, when the rostrum curtain raised nearly every seat in the hall of the Institute was taken. This was Children's Night, and the programme consisted of a musical concert by the children, interspersed with entertaining and amusing recitations and tableaux. All the pupils did so well that we hesitate to single out any, but it is certainly our duty to recognize special merit and should be our privilege to refer to those parts of the exercises that impressed us most without appearing invidious.

The "Bachelor's Proposal," a recitation by Master Howard McKinnon and Rena Johnson, was very well done indeed; the song by Miss Bettie Johnson, in the "Mother Goose Entertainment," was very sweetly rendered. The instrumental music by Misses Eva Lee, Bettie Johnson, Bettie Beaman and Hyacinth Peterson, was specially good. The Misses Atkinson, considering the short time they have been taking music, did very well indeed. In fact the whole musical concert was not only creditable to the pupils, but especially so to their careful, pains-taking and efficient teacher, Miss Claggett. The entertainment over the audience was invited up stairs to the and art gallery literally it was. A large hall with the walls covered with more than a hundred large beautiful paintings, arranged in the most artistic manner. The lover of the beautiful, with any artistic taste could not fail to be charmed in the midst of the inspiring scene. We were surprised to learn that the work was executed by comparative beginners, a majority of the art pupils having entered the studio for the first time at the beginning of this term, five months since. Such rapid progress and great proficiency in so short a time speaks in the highest terms of the proficiency and great success of Miss Sudie Faison as a teacher of Art. The many excellent results of the brush are too numerous to mention, but we were specially struck with the Autumn Scenes, the Ebonized Mirror, the Meadow Scene, and the Wreath of Marechal Neil Roses.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

As we go to press the evening entertainment is in progress. Misses Rena Stewart and Bessie Partrick charmed the audience with excellent music. Misses Sula Beaman, Mary Lou Kerr, Mollie Duffie, Lucy Taylor, and Ella Boney show signs of marked improvement and bid fair to become skilled musicians.

Of the tableaux and recitations, the following were the features of the evening. The Pyramid of Beauty, the Matrimonial Advertisement, the Interrupted Recitation by Miss Mary Herring and Master Ferdie Johnson, and the Daughters of the egiment. The latter was a pantomime regimental drill, and the fair soldiers took the audience by storm as willing and delighted captive.

The school will open again on the 1st Wednesday in September and the pupils and patrons of the school will be pleased to learn that Miss Faison and Miss Claggett will remain in the faculty. The pupils were delighted to have with them on this occasion Mrs. J. M. McIver (nee Miss Lois Anderson) one of their former teachers.

At the close of the entertainment Dr. B. F. Marable will make some timely and appropriate remarks on the subject of Music and Art.

Later:—The music medal was awarded to Miss Mollie Duffie and delivered by Dr. Marable in his usual happy and graceful style.

Colored Progress.

(Special Correspondent.)

The commencement and closing exercises of the Clinton Preparatory and Normal Institute last Friday, June 6th, eclipsed all former ones in the number of special attractions. The presence of Prof. Isham Royal, County Superintendent; Profs. A. H. Smith and A. . Moore, drew an immense crowd of interested visitors.

Moore's subject, "What will the Negro do?"

Smith's subject, "The Education of the Head, Heart and Hand."

Each treated his subject in a forcible and intelligent manner that reflected much credit on themselves and the race.

The speeches made by the students, the speakers of the day said, would reflect much credit upon any institution of learning.

Prof. W. H. Ashford was present and gave a very spicy little speech and to the point.

O. D. Holmes, L. H. Bizzell and W. T. Pritchett were also present.

Prof. Royal gave a very interesting and instructive but short address, being unwell. But the principal, G. W. Herring, says he cannot see how to let the Superintendent get around speaking when visiting his school. The good effects of his visit may be easily seen in the progress of the school. "He is a real stimulus."

G. W. Herring, the principal, is a hard worker and a lover of his race, and deserves to succeed in erecting the Normal School building here.

Average attendance was 41; whole number attended 74. W.

NEWTON GROVE.

The Duplin residence of Mr. J. W. Mallard was burned on Tuesday night the 3rd. The kitchen furniture and provisions were nearly all lost, but the bedroom furniture was saved. Mr. Mallard built the residence about 15 years ago at a cost of $1800. Three years since he moved to Faisons and build a residence there. His son was living in the residence at the time of the fire. The loss was only partially covered by insurance.

Mr. Editor; Sir, I noticed an article in your paper a week or two since headed Newton Grove Items. The author stated that the people were working with a will in the vicinity, and that crops were flattering. These are facts, an to indellibly impress the fact upon your readers, adds that he walked up to a neighbors the other day and found the wife plowing the faithful old horse who is the father of 16 children, 60 years of age and 6 feet 5½ inches tall. It surprised him, but a few moments thought solved the pablem It vividly came to his mind that his mare had a fine colt and determined her time should not be lost had the old woman to harness him to the plow. Every one that has read the article says the saddle fits me, at any rate I will accept it. By the by, taking all in consideration I think the author paid me and the old woman quite a compliment. If he had been an alliance man he would have readily seen that I was economizing. He, and all good farmers should submit to be in and harnessed to the alliance plow, and help break up the ruff and rugged soil we have to contend with, acknowledging the fact that the old woman did plow me a few rounds in the garden. I did not allow her to use the bridle, for I know full well she was an expert using the lines, in fact she can harness or unharness a horse as quickly as I can. That's not all, she can plow as strait a furrow, cook as good rations as any man's old woman. She is one of them. The author of the article under consideration particularizes the number of children the old horse has, as if it were some great Misnoma, as to the number he is the father of I can't say, but I sympathize with him in his dotage and has only one child living and he of age. It is well to prepare for old age as I have. Mr. Editor I do not claim the title of Partiarch exactly yet, but if I should live a hundred or two more years I'll begin to think I am getting there.

OLD HORSE.

Mr. Editor what would you think of a man that did haul out fleas to manure potatoes with? Would you not think him insane, or trying to invent a new fertilizer, or rather a fleatilizer? Well, sir, the very same man that wrote the article about the old woman plowing the old horse (her husband) did this very trick the other day. He concluded in the goat lot there was lots of fine manure, so he goes to hauling and putting out. He soon found the manure looked quite scanty in the drill. You know the nature of a flea, when you have him he is not there. The result was that they had broadcasted themselves over the patch. Soon the trouble came. All of the hands had to leave the patch. The old man is now at a loss how to manage to sit out more sprouts or work those he has set out, for he knows if he enters that patch again he will be the worse flea-bitten man on top side of the ground. Hush, I think I hear some one saying he has fallen upon n plan. He is going to send to the drug store and get him a half bushel of flea powders and work the whole thing out of the patch. Then he will be a happy man again.

Yuurs Respectfully, &c., OLD HORSE.

James Crucenbery died on the 2d inst. The child of Mr. Redden Underwood also died recently.

Crops look fine and the farmers are well up with their work.

Come out to Newton Grove to-day and hear the public lecture by Mr. Marion Butler on the principles of the Alliance and its relation to the needs of the country.

TURKEY.

Mr. Wm. H. Faison died on Tuesday, the 10th inst., with erysipelas, after an illness of ten days. He was born June 10th, 1815, and therefore died on his 75th birthday. He was buried yesterday morning at the family burying ground at Mr. N. C. Faison's.

The infant twin daughters of Capt. W. H. Thomson were buried on Tuesday evening, the 10th inst. Since their birth they have been very frail and delicate. The bond of sympathetic affinity between them was so strong that when one was taken ill the other would also be taken similarly in a few hours. The one that was the more delicate died Monday, at which time the other was as well as usual, but in a few hours was also taken ill, continued sick and died Tuesday morning. They were buried in the same coffin.

Rev. J. L. Britt performed the funeral ceremony.

YOUNG MEN AND SOCIETY.

God's Standard vs The World's Standard for Judging Men.

NO. 2.

Two week's since Dr. B. F. Marable preached in the Presbyterian church at Clinton the 1st of a series of sermons on the above subject from Isaiah 55 chapter 8th verse, which was reported in our issue of the 29th. On last Sabbath night he continued his sermon from the same text: "For my thoughts are not your thoughts neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." He said that the world was often disappointed and deceived in men; at one time Benedict Arnold, for his fine personal appearence and military bearing was intrusted with West Point, a very important post in the Revolutionary war. To the trust he proved false and attempted to betray it into the hands of the enemy. Had he been successful, who can calculate the consequences? The whole history, plan and fate of this mighty government might have been different. The trouble was the American people judged him by the wrong standard, and we came near paying dearly for it. For the same reason England was sadly deceived in Lord Bacon, and to day there is a great blot on the legal escutcheon of that great nation. On the other hand England judged Cromwell to be a bad and wicked man, a king-killer he was called, and never was he rightly judged till since the days of Macauly and Carlyle. All these men were judged by the World's standard, and hence the terrible mistake in each case. Judged by God's standard, which is devotion to truth, righteousness, and God's will, each of these and all other men would have been properly judged and served according to their merit from the beginning. Judged by the World's Standard, Napoleon Caesar and Alexander is the immortal trio of the World's great heroes. Where will they stand before the bar of God, judged by his Standard? These men, whose record consists of the spreading of ruin and the sheading of humor goes to satisfy a selfish ambition, the men who never did an iota for the betterment of humanity or for the cause of their creator on earth. Yes judged by God's Standand, these ephemeral earthly heroes will stand condemned while the humblest true christian subject will stand crowned as the hero of eternity.

FALSE STANDARD.

How do we judge the people around us? Some will judge by success; a travelling ganester stops in town and puts up a temporary stand. He wins the money of the boys—it is discovered that he did it by loaded dice,—a howl is raised against him and he is drummed out of the community. But we have among us a man who uses loaded scales. He cheates every one who deals with him by using false weights and measures, or he shaves notes, or charges exorbitant and usurious interest and takes advantage of the poor, needy, ignorant and unfortunate, in various ways. This man prospers, accumulates this world's goods. Behold he is a successful man, we show him great deference and are pleased to honor him and place him in high position, never inquire how he was successful, honestly or dishonestly. Judged by God's Standard, he is a failure and will stand condemned, and when the world is moralized and christianized up to God's Standard such men will also be so judged by the world.

Nicodemus was a rich man, one of the World's successful men, one who had great influence and held the highest position among his people. But when he came to the Lord for advice, all this counted for naught. Christ measured him by God's Standard and found him wanting, and saw that he was wrong from the beginning and so simply told him that he must commence from the beginning and be born again. And so it was a certain rich man who kept the letter of the law from his youth up.

One of the greatest mistakes we make in judging people, is to set ourselves up as a standard, judging all from our personal standpoint, judging by ourselves. Those who read what we read, dress like we dress, like those things that we like and greatest of all dislike and hate what we hate, then those persons we like and hug to our bosoms as persons to be trusted, to be our friends and boon companions. This is the guiding influence that draws together and separates the classes and clans of every community. Yes these two false standards, these great mistakes are responsible for a great many of the social, political and financial ills that we are suffering to day. And suffer and groan under such evil consequences we must till the world recognizes and turns from its error and begins to approach God's Standard by which the indivdal is to gauge himself and place a proper estimate upon his neighbor.

MOUNT OLIVE DEPARTMENT.

LOCAL ITEMS:

There is prospect for a bank here, let it come.

The prospects for the farmers were never better than at present. May it last until the harvest.

We hope to give our readers a statement of the truck shipped from Mount Olive this season, but it will take a little time to get the facts in shape. It will astonish the natives.

Mr. Marion Butler, the editor of THE CAUCASIAN and the business manager of THE TELEGRAM was in our town in the interest of the latter paper on last Tuesday.

In Mr. J. C. Williamson's field near here the cotton stalk stubbles of last year are sprouting up and producing stalks, and if let alone will probably produce a crop of cotton again this year.

Mr. T. R. Jerigan sends us a copy of The N. C. Intelligence published at Raleigh, N. C. It is eight columns and brim full of good printful reading and if kept up to present standard will be a credit to the State. We wish him much success.

We should be pleased to see the expenditures of Mount Olive published in THE TELEGRAM, the citizens have a right to see how the finances of the town are spent, and this is the only medium through which to make it known. Let us see it.

There will be a large crowd to the commencement exercises of Mount Olive High School. The many friends of education are invited to come out. Mr. Thos. W. Strange and Chas. B. Aycock will have large audiences. Everybody is invited. Music and eloquence. What a feast?

Mr. Marion Butler, of THE CAUCASIAN paid us a visit last week, and left us charmed with our town. We shall ever welcome this intelligent son of Sampson, and ask him to come oftener. Thanks for kind words in his paper. The people of Sampson should encourage him lavishly he is ever zealous for the prosperity of the people, and especially his home.

Rev. W. E. Crocker who graduates this week at Wake Forest, has been called as pastor to the Baptist church at this place. Our people all seem to be very favorably impressed with his earnest and original manner, and we predict for him a great measure of success as a minister, he displays the elements of strength and orginality so scarce in the present day.

We desire correspondents from every section around us, and shall be thankful if some one in each neighborhood will send us items every week. Don't let anything keep you from doing us this favor. We will gladly publish them, as we desire to make THE TELEGRAM a household necessity. Send them in by Saturday of each week.

Dr. I. W. Faison of this place was essayist at the recent meeting of the Physicians in Oxford, N. C. His subject was "Histerio—Nevroses," and those who heard his paper read, and in whose judgment we have great confidence, say the subject was handled in a scholarly and able manner and reflected great credit upon the fraternaty which he adorns as well as himself.

Now comes the Drummer with his shoes,
And another with his clothing,
The dirty Cooper with the blues,
The old maid with her soathing,
The candidate with a face of smiles,
And boodles on his hip,
And words of wisdom he piles and piles,
'Tis honey from his lip.
We wish you all the best of health,
But stretch your diaphragm,
Advise your friends to use their wealth,
And subscribe to THE TELEGRAM.

The county convention last Saturday demonstrated the fact that Wayne county is not unmindful of her valiant son C. B. Aycock, and asks the citizens of the 3rd District to send this zealous and able son to represent us in the next Congress. There is no one so eminently qualified for the position now before the convention, and the distinctin he has gained for himself in his conduct of last campaign, should be made known in a sphere where he can have an opportunity to display his powers. He is the "facile princeps" among the politicians of this section, and a broad gauge scholar. Hurrah for Charley!

Farmers Meeting.

Editor TELEGRAM: Please state that the Farmers' Meeting, near the Hatch old mill, will be Saturday the 21st day of June at 2 o'clock. D. E. STEVENS.

Mr. Willis Martin's baby died last Sunday.

Miss Mary Parker of Enfield is visiting at Mr. C. B. Prices'.

Mr. and Mrs. Y. H. Knowles are boarding at Mr. F. Oliver's.

Miss Annie Huffham of Scotland Neck is visiting at Dr. B. F. Marables.

Mrs. L. F. Oates' private school closed last Friday after a pleasant session of several months.

Rev. Mr. Crocker preached in the Baptist church last Sunday morning and night according to appointment.

Miss Sallie Wilson returned home last week from Kingstree S. C., where she has been teaching about a year.

Cabbage, Beets, Squash, Cucumbers &c are getting to be quite plentiful in the gardens about town.

Miss Kattie Elmore returned last Friday from Mapheyboro where she has been attending school since last summer.

From the arrangements the school children seem to be making, we may expect something rich at the entertainment next Friday night.

The tax lister, Mr. W. B. Bowden will be here on the 12th and 13th inst., (Thursday and Friday of this week.)

Miss Maggie Tew who has been spending some time in Clinton, was on a visit to her parents near here last Sunday.

Mr. A. S. Wells a young graduate in Dentistry has recently located in town. There is no excuse now for having the toothache.

The season for shipping vegetables has come to a close. The bean market, which was about the last, busted a few days ago.

Dr. Pennington of Wilson has been worging the Life Insurance business in our town lately for all it is worth. He says he "has never yet talked a man to death." But that he "once talked a man fast asleep."

The farmers are jubilant over the bright crop prospects. The seasons so far have hit just right and we sincerely hope they will continue the same. A rich harvest is one thing this part of the country is badly in need of.

In giving a report last week of Mr. and Mrs. Knowles' marriage we unintentionally neglected to state that the organ was presided over by Miss Annie Broadhurst of Kenansville, who performed in a beautiful manner. Some lovely wedding march.

Several of our young folks "paired off" last Wednesday and went to Seven Springs where they spent the day very pleasantly. They however would have had a better time—at noon at least, had it not been for a certain old hog which lives in that section. Friends take warning, if you wish to save your dinners you had better eat them before you get to the Springs.

The Newberne District Conference will convene in the Methodist church at this place on Thursday the 26th inst., and will include 5th Sunday. Rev. Mr. Abernethey is making arrangements to entertain the preachers and delegates, and we feel assured the liberal hearted people of which our town is full, will entertain the conference very handsomely. There are about a dozen preachers in the district which is entitled to 4 delegates to each pastoral charge.

kept up by a fund which he left for that purpose. It is open to the public every day except Sundays.

The Fair grounds and race track are open all the time. Sunday is a favorite day for coursing," which I learned by enquiry means running jack-rabbits with grey hounds. The lack of Sunday observance is painful to one who lives where all the people rest one day in seven. The street cars run just the same that day as any, many stores are open, and the theatres are attended by perhaps large crowds than during the week.

The General Conference, which is the legislative body of the M. E. church, South, convened in Centenary church at 9 o'clock a. m., on the 8th. It was called to order by Bishop Keener, who is now the senior Bishop of the church. He presided that day. The Bishops presided one day each in turn according to seniority. Bishop Hendrix is by all odds the best and most expeditions presiding offices among them. Bishops Wilson and Galloway are considered the best preachers among the old Bishops, but now they will share that honor with Bishop Haygood. The Conference was in session three weeks, lacking one day. Much of the time was consumed in needless debate and now concurring in what was proposed in the way of changes to the descriptive.

The chief matters done which mark the progress of the church were the election of two Bishops the election of three Missinary Secretaries instead of one, two Book agents, instead of one, and the establishment of church paper on the Pacific slope. That part of this State lying beyond the Blue Ridge Mountains was transferred from the Holston to the North Carolina Conference, and that part lying between the Roanoke and Chowan rivers from the Virginia to the North Carolina Conference, and the latter was divided into two Conferences to be known as the North Carolina and the Western North Carolina Conferences. The line begins at the Va, line between Rockingham and Caswell Counties and runs with the eastern line of the counties of Rockingham, Guilford and Randolph to the southeast corner of Randolph thence the southern line of Randolph and Davidson to the Yadkin river, thence with said river to the South Carolina line.

In the General Conference all the southern States, Mexico, Brazil, China, and Japan were represented. One of the delegates from China was a native who dressed in the costume of his country.

Now, Mr. Editor, if the above compliance with your request to give your readers some account of my trip, shall prove of interest to them I shall feel more that repaid for the trouble.

A GRAND MASONIC MEETING.

One of the most interesting and pleasant Masonic events was that celebrated at Clinton, N. C., on Thursday night with Hiram Lodge No. 98. The occasion was the conferring of the Master's degree upon Mr. W. A. Johnson, that highly esteemed citizen of that place. Worshipful Samuel Northrop, of Wilmington Lodge No. 319, and his officers, did the honors in their usual style before a large assembly, and all were very much gratified at the manner in which the whole programme was carried out. After the conferring of the degree and the exchanging of many social amenieties, the lodge assembled at the refreshment hall where the fair ladies had prepaired a banquet. It is hardly necessary to say that all enjoyed the occasion to the fullest extent.

The Wilmington delegation numbering twenty-five was met by the fair ladies and the committee from the lodge, and was signed to their respective homes. The Clinton people are well known for their generous hospitality and the Wilmington Masons hope an opportunity will present itself when they can reciprocate.

This social events has already brought about some good for Hiram Lodge as several have signified their intentions to become Masons. Hiram Lodge is to be congratulated on having among its members such a man as Mr. W. A. Johnson and we are confident he will make a bright Mason and will be a credit to Masonry.

One of the most enjoyable features of the occasion was the singing by the choir which was complimented by all. After the lodge was closed and the choir had been refreshed the organ was moved to the refreshment hall where music was furnished for the ladies' special benefit. The whole occasion was greatly enjoyed by the Wilmington bretheren, and they will walk forward with pleasure to another visit to that delightful place.—Wilmington Messenger.
